Acoustic Genius Edward Burns

Written by
Dylan Gallagher 5/18/12

A great acoustic and rock sound comes out of the mind of this brilliant young man named Edward Burns. He's written all the music and lyrics, and he also performs all vocals and instruments. His album was just released this year and it is called All Of Me, and it is complete with ten original songs. Edward Burns has a crisp acoustic sound and a beautifully light voice.

His song "Wild and Free" builds slowly into a powerful, emotional climactic ending. Edward's voice in "In Your Eyes" is chilling, and the accompanying lead guitar work adds to the effect, melancholically swaying you back and forth in a haunting melody. The acoustic guitar in "Silver Angel" is elegant and holds a great rhythm, and Edward's voice over the guitar is a great juxtaposition because his voice is filled with gloom. "Save the dying heart," he sings out, more than ready to give all of himself to the listener.

The production of "All Of Me" is expertly done, and I must give Edward Burns a firm clap on the back for his hard work. The music all sounds great and has a strong, emotional center that rings true of its creator. Edward Burns knows what he is doing and has an excellent grasp of what it takes to write music.

It would be foolish to let this youthful star slip through the cracks. Listen to him; take in all he has to offer you. You will not be disappointed. In order to buy Edward Burns' album All Of Me, and to find out more about him, check out his website here:

Edward Burns has been teaching and studying music professionally for 20 years now. He is a former student of Marylhurst University where he graduated with honors as a Guitar Performance Major. He is well known for his unique and refined teaching style which he contributes to an online guitar course taught from Portland Community College. Little do people know that he composes his own music and hopes to share it with the world. His first album "All Of Me" explores the balances of acoustic and electronic sounds and haunting subject matters.

Edward Burns guitar style is neither overly dark nor overly optimistic. The chops meet in the middle to produce a flow-e (if that's even a word) type sound. The melodies, voice, and smooth production that surround mystical and mysterious subjects in songs like Requiem and Silver Angel result in a very dream and roomy sound. The album song structure and the order that they're in ironically create an alluring flow that will leave you not wanting to skip a song. Your mind will be filled with visual and audio images of each song. The way each song carelessly carries into the next one is unrecognizable. As such, "All Of Me" does have the overall musical congruence that can be expected from this talented individual. He did after all complete the album on his own from playing all the instruments to recording and mixing.

Edward has packed a truckload of influences and life experiences in "All Of Me". The album is all over the place in terms of sound, but impressively the end results are cohesive and will not leave you confused. You can buy the album here <http://www.cdbaby.com/cd/edwardburns>. I highly recommend it if you would like to be taken to a far away land surrounded by beautiful music.
